Stereoselective recombination of molecular radicals for regioselective synthesis of linear enamides and beta-amino acids. The generation of molecular radicals is one of the most important reactions for the establishment of radicals in organic chemistry. However, the direct linkage of linear enamides to radicals is rare in classical radical chemistry. To overcome this problem, we developed a protocol for the synthesis of unsaturated esters through the nucleophilic addition of a radical trap to an alkene. According to this procedure, an electron-deficient methylene-tetrahydrofuran-2-yl ketone was used as the radical precursor and reacted with the alkene fragment of the unsaturated ester in the presence of tributyltin hydride or phenyltrimethylsilane to give the expected beta-amino acid. Our further studies confirmed the efficiency of this new procedure.

Biancai The biancai ( ) is a specialized weapon found in 988 Infantry Manual, a Chinese book about calishing warfare written by Wang Ming, a military commander. It was a Chinese cavalry saber with a blade of, which was carried by the cavalryman's second right hand and used when his first hand has been used to manage a weapon, such as crossbow or whip. In order to increase the basic thrust power of the saber, it has to be held with a diagonal grip instead of a vertical grip, and thus should be carried with a diagonal grip. According to the section 54 of the manual, the biancai was used by cavalry in pairs. Each cavalryman had a "left biancai", which was carried at the left hip, and a "right biancai", which was carried at the right hip. The biancai was a shorter sword as compared to the rest of the cavalry weaponry. The overall length was about, blade was long, and it was hiltless. When one of the cavalryman has his biancai drawn, he would immediately hold it with the "right hand". If the Chinese cavalryman held his biancai with his right hand, that meant he was attacking an enemy with his "right saber". If he held it with his left hand, that meant he was ready for defense. It can also be used to stab. References Category:Chinese swords shown to be required for TGF- $\beta$ 1-induced myofibroblast differentiation \[[@B11]\]. Noteworthy, our results also showed that TFG- $\beta$ 1-induced KLF4 expression was prominently decreased by knockdown of Smad3 in rat liver fibroblasts, suggesting that Smad3 is required for TFG- $\beta$ 1-induced KLF4 expression during liver fibrosis. Notably, in human HSCs, Smad3 is also critical for the TGF- $\beta$ 1-induced KLF4 expression. The decreased KLF4 expression in Smad3-deficient human HSCs has also been observed in our previous study \[[@B16]\]. However, in human fibroblasts, KLF4 expression appears to be elevated in Smad3-deficient cells, which may be due to the loss of the negative feedback regulatory loop of Smad3 on Smad3 itself \[[@B36],[@B37]\]. Moreover, our recent studies showed that the TGF- $\beta$ 1-induced KLF4 expression was severely decreased by knockdown of Smad3 in human hepatocellular carcinoma cells \[[@B38],[@B39]\]. Thus, our and other results indicate that Smad3 is critical for KLF4 induction in both HSCs and hepatocytes. KLF4 regulates a broad spectrum of cell functions through direct or indirect interactions with various nuclear transcription factors. Among these, the interaction between KLF4 and Smad3 is the most extensively studied \[[@B11],[@B14],[@B16],[@B20]\]. Our results showed that the binding of Smad3 to the KLF4 promoter was significantly decreased in Smad3-deficient hepatic myofibroblasts. In contrast, binding of Smad3 to the promoter of  $\alpha$ -SMA was significantly increased in the Smad3-deficient fibroblasts. Interestingly, knockdown of Smad3 dramatically increased the KLF4 protein level, which was accompanied by a remarkable reduction in the expression of  $\alpha$ -SMA. These results suggest that Smad3 recruits the co-repressor complex to the KLF4 promoter, thereby suppressing the transcription of KLF4. Furthermore, we used chromatin immunoprecipitation to demonstrate that Smad3 was indeed recruited to the KLF4 promoter in fibroblasts. These findings
