Why Some Take Our Word for it There's been a lot of discussion in various media about the recent statement on Common

Core State Standardized testing that we released on February 3, 2012. The University of Florida letter of support of the standards is also a frequently cited as the reason "behind much of the anti-Common Core movement." As a parent to a son in a private Florida high school, I am grateful for the statement we issued, even if I don't support every idea. As a parent, my responsibility is to help my child find the right school for him or her. My school district recently sent out personalized, detailed information to parents about a secondary school that was offering a free half-day (or, half-week) of classes. The parent was invited to attend a program at the school on Wednesday, February 29. The principal of the school was present, as well as some teachers, some of the other administrators and the school's Headmaster. When I asked the principal why she invited me, she said it was because "they asked me to." And she didn't mind sending parents a flyer because she thought they "might want to know" about the school. How is this

If you like BrochureHow to Remain Loyal to Winning Political Ideas Since the November election, there has been a good deal of talk in the mainstream media about how the Democrats “won the election” by presenting an appealing message, and in so doing, they “won the agenda.” Some in the media also argue that the Republicans lost the election by “running the table” with an agenda of tax cuts and deregulation, and the Democrats had to do what they could to “compete.” Pundits have also noted that

Donald Trump did not run on an agenda in the same way that Clinton did, and therefore he couldn't win. None of this is new. The media and the pundits talk about it all the time. But I think it is important to remember that the media and the pundits never really tell us about the other side of the argument
