The planet of Angel Alliance is changing. For the last 100 years, the people have been frozen in their daily routines as they wait patiently. When the Empire Fleet came to the planet, the commoners started to realize that the Emperor's troops were not here to rescue them. They were here to conquer the planet and plunder their natural resources. The commoners, without much idea of what was going on, suddenly saw the Empire return for the second time, this time dressed in black. When the power of the Empire's electromagnetic waves started to affect the residents, their muscles started to grow in size. There was a young girl who could stand on her hands, then another. Escape the clutches of friendship and social expectations in this top-down puzzler about living with social anxiety. Go to social gatherings and try to complete your obligations before you get too stressed. If your anxiety gets too high it's game over. The purpose of Personal Space is to create the experience of social anxiety for any player that interacts with the game. We wanted to make this game because it opens up a really important conversation about social anxiety, how it affects us, and why we need to talk about it. We think it's important that, even if you're not someone prone to social anxiety yourself, you can empathize with the experience and with other people who may feel social anxiety in their daily lives. We want this to be a game that fosters a sense of community. Its about understanding that even if you experience social anxiety youre not alone. A lot of us are anxious, and in that we can find community. Who is Pastel Peaks Production? We are a team of students from the University of Utah's Entertainment Arts and Engineering Program. What's new:

Tag's official 1st and 10th anniversary edition. Infinite Ammo: "Infinite ammo must be an American phenomenon" - an EA spokesperson. You Can Run But You Cannot Hide: "They hid you to make you feel like they had a better life. Did you notice you're running form the last red bus?": "My arrest warrant is your best friend. I have two in a row." Director's Cut: A secret meaning behind the turn of events in Cairo and Kanegis' fate. Achievement Collector: You are on a radio call, and while making the call to DC, you switch to a different caller. You are then interrupted by a DC official, and talk back and forth in an exchange that communicates the that official does not get your call. You are suspended. This is repeated daily for Weeks, and then the BOE official hands you an email explaining why you are being suspended. However, you also have a separate conversation with Borys about it in which he assures you that the official is wrong: You are in a secret meeting with: "He's... he's allowed to say these things?" an incredulous you asks Borys. The email "doesn't explain anything in the least", and so you ask about it, and the BOE official says he's blind, and he doesn't like making decisions without seeing the evidence. You were supposed to meet Borys at 1 PM. You had been drinking coffee. You stagger to the subway at 2 PM, taking only the shoes you normally wear, "but I had itchy feet." (Continue reading) It didn't take me long before I realized that there was no solid precedent on how to go about "winning" achievements. Some achievements are simple hard mode tasks (Infinite Ammo, Poser) and some are just getting out in the open (Infinite Ammo, Exhuming the Grave). So, after some watching others play, I made up my own criteria of achievements. I assume that you all are familiar with The Arthur Report and this one is based off of some of his games. You'll notice that I've changed some details, like the color and sticking number, and that I decided to start where the character was before the start up screen. I hope this helps the community as a whole. I've realized that this may turn into a type of thing I like doing: for example, when I finished a game

The struggle for life is so intense, as long as survival rate is not 100%, you will keep improving yourself. Lightning Fast is a horror survival game with unique animal dynamics, extreme realism and interactive mechanic. It is a realistic and thrilling experience, that is heavily 'mechanics driven' and very rewarding. Touch, dash, jump, dodge, avoid or fight? With no second round, you are making it up as you go along, making yourself be the sole judge of good and bad hunting. Survive or die, it's up to you. I am trying to fix the current Beta version of LFF. It's up on Steam right now. When I get it fixed, I'm going to upload it for people. I've actually played it a bit and there are still a few bugs with the engine. Other than that, it's a fun experience that I think needs a complete overhaul. 1.It's still in Beta. Really don't know what they are going to do with the beta version. 2.I really don't know why they turned it into a game about hunting instead of nature reserve. Maybe if they remove the hunting part, then it will be a bit better. 3.There were bugs too, but mostly network stability. As for effects, they really need a lot of work.Q: Dynamically created textboxes in a user control I have a user control containing a panel, and I'd like to add textboxes programmatically to the panel when I build the user control on the fly in codebehind. I have the following method in which I'm adding a textbox to the control: private void AddTextBox(int x, int y, string tbName) { // create a new textbox, and set some of its properties TextBox tb = new TextBox(); tb.Name = tbName; tb.Location = new System.Drawing.Point(x, y); tb.TextAlign = System.Drawing.ContentAlignment.MiddleCenter; tb.Size = new System.Drawing.Size(150, 24);
