It is amazing how much stuff we take for granted every day and how many people struggle to use them. I guess that an app or something that could track and report out on some of the stuff we take for granted or have trouble using would be a good thing. This App called Duefocus seems to do just that, it tracks and reports on some of the stuff we use every day but at the same time save us a few steps. In an age where computers have become a familiar part of our lives, businesses around the world are struggling to produce high quality output. In most workplaces, employees have access to a range of software and hardware tools that enable them to perform their tasks more effectively, but this only takes the focus off what is important. It also takes time and effort to be productive. As part of the process, workers need to document, plan and schedule their workload. For them to do this effectively, they need to have visibility of their team members' and their own performance – how they are measuring up against their peers and whether they are achieving their goals. DueFocus is a time tracking and time reporting app, it allows you to collect and analyse data on an employee's performance in order to effectively plan and manage their workload and ensure that they are performing at their best. In the workplace, due focus allows managers and employees to share their time and performance in a comprehensive way. You can use it to gauge an employee's productivity and allocate their workload in a way that makes the most of their time – improving efficiency and productivity. Through due focus, employees also get a better sense of how their work is performing and they learn to manage their work load more effectively. Due focus is an extremely user-friendly product that can be used with colleagues, teams or businesses. It is available in five languages (English, German, Italian, Portuguese and Spanish) and can be used for specific team roles, departments, or across the whole organization. There is a free version of the app that is suitable for smaller
