Softwepac.comQ: In UWP, how to detect if I'm in an app or a app view? I have a page with some content, and when I navigate to this page, I want to start a full screen app. When I hit the back button, I want to return back to the page, not the app. How can I detect when I'm in the app or an app view? A: You need to set the page with some kind of identifier, e.g. an id or a text (you can use both in UWP). Then you can retrieve this id or text in the OnNavigatedTo/OnNavigatedFrom and check for this id/text in the "page" event. You can find more info in Page Navigation and View Navigation Your question is somewhat broad. Can you give more examples? Q: How to make an array from a regex I'm having some difficulties creating an array in ruby (not sure if this is what the correct term is, but since it's what I know) I have a string "I want all colors, and all materials" and then I'm using a regex to remove anything that isn't color or material. The problem is that I still need to have those in an array format that can be passed to my code. How can I transform the string into an array of colors and materials? Thank you A: It seems like you need the following: "I want all colors, and all materials".split(/#{RUBY_PLATFORM}(?:,|$)/).map(&:tr) #=> ["all colors", "all materials"] Also, you can store the splitted items in a hash: s = "I want all colors, and all materials" s.split(/#{RUBY_PLATFORM}(?:,|$)/).map { |s| s.tr } #=> {"all colors"=>"all colors", "all materials"=>"all materials"}
