Evaluation of factors associated with quality of life (QOL) and function in elderly persons with dementia presents several challenges. This study examines age-related differences among residents of four Missouri nursing homes in nine basic measures of cognition, function, and behaviors to identify areas of potential concern with this population. In this cross-sectional study, 349 residents completed the Brooks adaptation of the Elderly Psychiatric Screening Questionnaire, the Activities of Daily Living (ADL) scale, and the Mini-Mental State Examination. In addition, 6 staff members completed the Staff-Evaluated Quality of Life Scale for Nursing Homes
