The most powerful way to extract data from websites and manipulate data is with a programming language. PHP. A new report from Human Rights Watch suggests that the government of China is using a network of farms in the country to produce forced labor for the Chinese economy. “No Limits: How the Chinese Government is Abusing Workers in the Factories to Come to America,” released on Tuesday, explains the organization’s research into the development of an industry outside the country’s borders. The report’s authors, report that officials are harvesting the labor of people imprisoned in “government-operated farms,” and that prisoners are receiving an “inadequate” amount of food and other human rights. “Every inmate that I’ve spoken with has told me that they were promised [that] they were going to be given a job when they get released,” wrote Hua Hui, a doctoral student at George Washington University and one of the report’s authors, in an interview with The Guardian. “Almost all of them said they were simply told to come to a factory and they were going to be given a job.” According to the findings of the report, government officials are trafficking Chinese nationals and producing a surplus of labor and goods from inside Chinese prisons. The majority of prisoners are being held in agricultural prisons, known as “Villages of Forced Labor.” These facilities are also being used to produce food for Chinese restaurants, hotels, and other food suppliers. The report suggests the use of re-education camps is keeping Chinese prisoners around the country submissive and un-entrepreneurial, preventing them from pursuing quality jobs. The use of incarceration in China and the development of “forced labor” industry is not a new practice. The report states that many of these modern day-labor camps resemble prisons from the country’s past. “The current system appears to be not unlike the system of slavery on a mass scale that existed in the Qing dynasty and was only abolished in 1925,” wrote Wilson. Hua Hui also called the Chinese government’s abuses “repugnant.” “The government has said that these labor camps are like ordinary farms,” she said. “But that is simply false. It’s a well-known practice to buy and sell human beings. c6a93da74d
