Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an information processing apparatus, an information processing method, and a program. More particularly, the present invention relates to an information processing apparatus, an information processing method, and a program, which enable the user to easily make a selection of a language used for an application as desired by the user. 2. Description of the Related Art As a language used for an application program, in general, a language such as English or Japanese is used. In some cases, a conventional application program cannot be executed in a desired language. Thus, there are instances where the user needs to make a selection of the language used for the application program or needs to change the language used for the application program. Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No. 2000-147781 discloses a method for storing the character codes in a memory of a personal computer and providing a foreign language support tool which enables a user to select a desired foreign language and convert the character codes in the memory of the personal computer to the character codes in the selected foreign language. IBM introduced personal computers at their initial public offering in 1979. By 1981, IBM had nearly completely absorbed the personal computer business, and had started marketing their product in Europe. The European market launched a tremendous interest in the system, and IBM built a distribution network throughout Europe that was used to spur the market growth. Despite the launch of their German distribution in 1980, IBM's lack of success in Europe was due to a lack of interest in personal computers. In addition to this problem, IBM seemed to be unable to respond to their European customers, as well as their American ones. By the late 1980s and early 1990s, IBM's ability to stay competitive was in dire need of improvement. In 1992, the IBM PC ceased manufacturing and was replaced by the IBM ThinkPad.
